Rationale

Great Western is a sub-region of the Grampians wine region in Victoria, southeastern Australia. The historical area has been producing wine since the 1860s and is home to some of Australia's oldest wine estates. Shiraz is the region's key grape variety, making a more spiced, delicate red wine than those that come from South Australia to the west. Great Western is also the birthplace of the Australian sparkling Shiraz wine. Shiraz accounts for a large proportion of the wines made under the Great Western name.

Cool climate Great Western Shiraz is known being a well-balanced combo of tangy cherries, plums, licorice, damp coffee grounds, black olives, soft mint, and wild green herbs. They are full bodied but soft spoken, with smooth textured fruit, distinctive grainy tannins, and a savory earthy core.

Best's winery and vineyards are among Australia's best kept secrets. Indeed, the vineyards, with vines dating back to 1866, have secrets that may never be revealed: for example, one of the vines planted in the Nursery Block has defied identification and is thought to exist nowhere else in the world. Part of the cellars too, go back to the same era, constructed by butcher-turned-winemaker Henry Best and his family. The Thomson family has owned the property since 1920, with Ben, the 5th generation, having taken over management from father Viv. Best's Bin No. 1 is considered a classic and Australian icon in Shiraz.
