Rationale

Washington's Columbia Valley has a reputation for producing high-quality Syrah, Merlot, and Cabernet Sauvignon with intense, robust flavors. The sunny, dry climate of the valley is well-suited to these varieties. Of the three, Merlot is spoken about the least, although this variety and Riesling pioneered the state's reputation in premium wines in the 1980s and 1990s. Funny how time makes us forget and move with what is fashionable.

In the 1980s, Merlot indeed helped put the Washington wine industry on the world's wine map. Prior to this period there was a general perception that the climate of Washington State was too cold to produce red wine varietals. Merlots from the Columbia Valley are often noted for their deep color and balanced acidity, while the state's climate lends itself towards long days and hours of sunshine with cool nights that contribute to a significant diurnal temperature variation and produce wines with New World fruitiness and Old World structure.

Barnard Griffin Winery began in 1983 with borrowed grapes and a rented cellar, the dream of founders Deborah Barnard and Rob Griffin. It has since become one of Washington's most enduring and award-winning wineries. At the helm then and now is the most experienced winemaker in Washington State, Rob Griffin. In addition to the winery production facility, the Richland campus is home to a tasting room and fused glass art studio.
